Angel's Envy Bourbon Kentucky

Angel's Envy has one of the most sensual bouquets ever nosed on a bourbon. Soft, gentle, and with aromas of warm caramels, maple candy, satsumas, brown sugar, and praline, the bouquet is a study in subtle complexities. The port influence is most evident here, providing solid flavors of walnut and oak, orange marmalade, fresh mint, and Seville orange. It's a long, lingering, and utterly delicious finish.

Berkshire Mountain Distillers Berkshire Bourbon

This bourbon has a very light nose. There's caramel, spice, and alcohol there, but none of it is overly assertive. In the mouth, it's mellow, maybe a bit muddled, with toffee, oak, pepper, and even a brief appearance of banana. The finish is very short and gets spicy.

Bird Dog Bourbon Small Batch

Citrus and currant notes lead off the front. There's a slight cereal grain and earthy undertone that leads into a short, not particularly memorable floral and spice finish. To me, the palate indicates that the dog's stay in the barrel was a relatively short one.

Deep smoke, heavy oak profile with classic Bourbon flavors - toasted corn, caramel and spice, without being too sweet. Bold spicy aromatics balance the dry graininess on the nose. Finishing with hints of dry seasoned wood, fresh pine resin and dried red fruit. Kosher

Eagle Rare Bourbon Single Barrel

Kentucky

The palate is simplistically sweet without a ton of depth. Upfront notes of honey, toasted brown sugar, new oak, and light traces of white pepper are all present. While not deep, it's very tasty and I would imagine that even a non-bourbon drinker would find it enjoyable. I found myself going back often to sip this throughout the review to taste more of the deliciously sweet palate.

Simple classic bourbon scents of vanilla, honey, and light oak intermingle with light hints of orange rind and graham cracker. These are all topped with a surprising amount of ethanol. While it isn't overly harsh, it seems odd for such a low proof bourbon. Ethanol aside, this is a low key nose with scents that are simple enough to enjoy for even a bourbon novice.
